Russia's Action Beginning To Make the People Wonder About Value of UN

By DAVID MACKENZIE
Foreign Affairs Analyst

If your columnist could be given any wish in connection with the Russian-French-Russian conflict in Paris, it would be that the small economic program with the Marshall plan would be dropped. It would come true, the Soviet Union and the Western Allies might consider their grave differences and join hands only in the Marshall plan but the rehabilitation of the whole world.

That they cut shadow-boxing, to disagree and go their respective ways. This would mean consolidating the division of Europe into eastern and western blocs, but it would at least enable with rehabilitation as wide a sphere of influence.

Now, of course, the world is a super-organization who expected nothing to be granted Moscow already has turned thumbs down on the Marshall plan, and the Marshall plan is a dead letter. The Marshall plan is a dead letter. The Marshall plan is a dead letter. The Marshall plan is a dead letter.

However, that should clear the air. Russia has given her answer to the question that she doesn't want.

To fail, a Red Cross spokesman said, about 8,400 were estimated to be in the city from the Red Cross. A new flood threat was reported at Grifton, N.J., just north of Atlanta, the Illinois river flow, which is to bring Europe under Moscow's domination.

As was widely anticipated, Russia has come through with a blunt refusal to cooperate. From it still remains for the western democracies to decide whether to start energetically to take their own medicine in dealing with Russia. It is unfortunate that Europe could be divided into two blocs, but since this must be, it is equally unfortunate if the western democracies don't move quickly to consolidate as much of the continent as they can. The move to rehabilitation and the defense of the Marshall plan is moving continually. We shall see.

This crisis is a direct outgrowth of perhaps even more serious causes. Many of the delegations to the United Nations have been warning Russia's verdict on the Marshall proposal with great anxiety, fearing that this would give Russia a free hand to carry out its intentions regarding Europe.

That is a momentous question, for two solid years the U. N. has struggled vainly to get ahead with the Marshall plan. The Marshall plan has been nullified by the veto of the Soviet Union.

The affairs of the unhappy U. N. have been a constant source of worry to the United States. The members are wondering whether the organization can be made to function as it is constituted or whether it should be reconstituted.

Will the time arrive when there will have to be two leagues, just as there presumably will continue to be two leagues in Europe?

Arkansas Louisiana Gas Company officials said the council now is considering a plan to build a gas line, Grady Street, to contact the council, to contact the council, to contact the council.

State Weather Bureau in 68th Year

By JOHN HASLAM
United Press Staff Correspondent

Little Rock, July 1. (UP)—The United States Weather Bureau here celebrated its 68th anniversary today.

And like good violins and fine wine, it improves with age. Signal Corps established the first weather station in Little Rock in 1879. The lone weatherman took two observations daily with two barometers, two thermometers and a rain gauge.

Now the 24-hour station at Adams Field employs 18 persons to operate the latest weather-recording devices. Barometers and wind velocity and direction equipment. It uses light, beam and radio methods to determine the ceiling. It has other instruments to show wind velocity and direction, temperature and humidity up to an altitude of nearly 25 miles.

The first weather bureau was located on the second floor of the old Stoddard Bank building at the corner of Main and Markham in Little Rock. It was moved seven times and on April 16, 1942, to its present location atop the administration building at Adams Field.

The bureau was separated from the Army Signal Corps in 1946. It is now a civilian station under the Department of Agriculture, with Western Walter C. Hildeman as chief.

An entry for Jan. 22, 1883, said the river was frozen for more than 60 miles above Little Rock. On Feb. 27, 1883, there was a record of rain and thunderstorms in the Little Rock area. It said a family from Argentina was slightly injured when two bolts of lightning struck opposite ends of their home at almost the same instant.

On Feb. 3, 1888, northern Arkansas had a snow from 20 to 24 inches deep, and Little Rock had four inches.

On Oct. 2, 1884, the bureau reported a tornado struck Little Rock.

Opposition of GOP Halts 12 Flood Projects

Washington, July 1. (UP)—Rep. Kerr (D-OK) said today that opposition by a powerful Republican bloc had threatened a denial of appropriations for 12 big flood control and navigation projects in the South.

The projects on which Kerr said Dundero mentioned "baiting" appropriations for construction this year included the following: estimated cost, year congress authorized.

Without naming other congressmen, Kerr said the plan "threatened to turn the vital flood control issue into a partisan fight."

Heroic Deputy Averts a Lynching

Carrollton, Ga. July 1. (UP)—A heroic deputy sheriff thwarted a lynching at the county jail last night when he held off 20 members of a white mob until reinforcements could arrive to rescue a Negro murder suspect.

Deputy Sheriff Russell Lambert discovered the mob in the jail when he peered from the window of his residence on the Villa Rica-Carrollton road just before 9 p.m.

He said he guessed what was up and telephoned a warning to Sheriff.

King was in another room, telephoning nearby towns for help in a few minutes, state patrol cars, sheriff's deputies and men from surrounding counties were coming along roads and highways, headed for the jail.

Outside, the mob was growing restless as they waited for the jail to be taken.

Easy Way to Buy Travel Insurance

The cool look and uncombed hair of the famous actress, who gave cosmetic stockings their name, is a trademark.

As stocking standards, however, the actress, of leg makeup, made up her mind how to make the look of glamorous hose. That she did it by using a cosmetic method of getting in and out of her stockings, she said.

Read the label and curb your tendency to spread the paint job. Taking time to blend make-up over your feet and going easy on the amount you apply are rules that can't be shopped off if you are looking for successful results.

If you want to keep this summer's longer legs safe from leg slaps, buff off the powdery residue with long gentle strokes. As good as any is an old stocking brushed over legs and feet.

The first weather bureau was located on the second floor of the old Stoddard Bank building at the corner of Main and Markham in Little Rock. It was moved seven times and on April 16, 1942, to its present location atop the administration building at Adams Field.

The bureau was separated from the Army Signal Corps in 1946, and civilian status under the Department of Agriculture. Westerner Walter C. Hildeman ran across a few weather oddities. A log book kept by the bureau under the signal corps.

For instance, on Nov. 30, 1880, was this entry: "River frozen from mouth of the Arkansas to the Gulf of Mexico." Another entry, dated April 8, 1913, reads: "Heavy snow from 20 to 24 inches deep, and Little Rock had four feet of snow."

On Oct. 2, 1884, the bureau reported a tornado struck Little Rock at 3:28 p. m., killed four persons, injured 100, and caused damage estimated at $150,000.

Records showed the hottest day ever recorded for Little Rock was 110 degrees on Aug. 10, 1936. The coldest was 12 degrees below zero on Feb. 12, 1880. The heaviest rain in any 24-hour period was 9.58 inches April 8 and 9, 1913. The heaviest snowfall was 13 inches March 17 and 18, 1913. The highest wind velocity was 40 miles an hour in mummy, 1915.

On Feb. 27, 1937, the bureau recorded rain and thunderstorms in the Little Rock area. It said a family in Argentina was "slightly injured" when two bolts of lightning struck the family's home at 10:15 a. m. on Feb. 2, 1938. Northern Arkansas had a snow from 20 to 24 inches deep, and Little Rock had four feet of snow.

Heroic Deputy Averts a Lynching

Carrollton, Ga. July 1. (UP)—A heroic deputy sheriff thwarted a lynching at the county jail last night when he held off 300 members of a white mob until reinforcements could arrive to rescue a Negro murder suspect.

Deputy Sheriff Russell Lambert discovered the mob in the jail when he peered from the window of his residence on the Villa Rica-Carrollton road just before 9 p. m.

He said he guessed what was up and telephoned a warning to Sheriff.

King was in another room, telephoning nearby towns for help in a few minutes, state patrol cars, and a sheriff's posse.

Outside, the mob was growing restless as the sheriff's posse arrived and quietly to the jail leader.

Lambert said the mob leader told him: "That's just the trouble. This Negro is going to get a hot one."

State Weather Bureau in 68th Year

By JOHN HASLAM
United Press Staff Correspondent

Little Rock, July 1. (UP)—The United States Weather Bureau here celebrated its 68th anniversary today.

And like good violins and fine wine, it improves with age. Signal Corps established the first weather station in Little Rock in 1879. The lone weatherman took two observations daily with two barometers, two thermometers and a rain gauge.

Now the 24-hour station at Adams Field employs 18 persons to operate the latest weather-recording device for computing the day's weather. The station is in the basement of the building at Adams Field. It has automatic recording thermometers, anemometers and wind velocity and direction equipment. It uses light, beam and radio signals to determine the ceiling. It has other instruments to show wind velocity and direction, temperature and humidity up to an altitude of nearly 25 miles.

The first weather bureau was located on the second floor of the old Stoddard Bank building at the corner of Main and Markham in Little Rock. It was moved seven times and on April 16, 1942, to its present location atop the administration building at Adams Field.

The bureau was separated from the Army Signal Corps in 1945. It was transferred to the Department of Agriculture under Western Union. C. H. Hildner was the first weatherman at Adams Field. He was succeeded by J. H. Hildner, who was succeeded by J. H. Hildner, who was succeeded by J. H. Hildner.

An entry for Jan. 22, 1883, said the river was frozen for more than 60 miles above Little Rock. On Feb. 27, 1883, the record of rain and thunderstorms in the Little Rock area. It said a family from Argentina was killed by lightning bolts on the roof of their home at the same time.

On Feb. 3, 1888, northern Arkansas had a snow from 20 to 24 inches deep, and Little Rock had four inches.

On Oct. 2, 1884, the bureau reported a tornado struck Little Rock.

Heroic Deputy Averts a Lynching

Carrollton, Ga. July 1. (UP)—A heroic deputy sheriff thwarted a lynching at the county jail last night when he held off 20 members of a white mob until reinforcements could arrive to rescue a Negro murder suspect.

Deputy Sheriff Russell Lambert discovered the mob in the jail when he peered from the window of his residence on the Villa Rica-Carrollton road just before 9 p.m.

Cotton Loop Leaders Win Over Cellarites

By The Associated Press

The Cotton Loop League leading Greenville Bucks defeated the last place Hot Springs Pathfinders 4 to 3 last night, but it took them an ex-

The Bucks victory came in the ninth when Third Baseman, Frank Brumley, came home with the winning hit.

Greenville's Johnny Myers, batting in the ninth, drove in the winning run.

Flung up nine runs in the first three innings, the second position Greenwood Dodgers battered Hot Springs.
